Southern Regional Institute and ETTC

The Southern Regional Institute (SRI) and Educational Technology Training Center (ETTC) has had a long and successful history in the delivery of professional development opportunities for preK-12 educators in the southern region and across the state of New Jersey. Nearly 12,000 classroom teachers, technology coordinators, support staff members and school administrators participate in programming provided by the SRI&ETTC each year on subjects including the New Jersey Core Curriculum Content Standards, the new Common Core State Standards, instructional practices, computer technologies, ESL strategies, special education, classroom management, school leadership and governance, intervention and referral services as well as a variety of other topics requested by school personnel in districts around the state.

Housed in the School of Education at The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey, the SRI&ETTC is a voluntary consortium of 90 school districts representing six counties in the southern region of the state. Through these partnerships, the SRI&ETTC has been able to build a unique organization that can be responsive to the needs of individual school districts as well as the needs and demands of the changing landscape of preK-12 education. Access to the services and programs of the SRI&ETTC is not limited to member districts. Requests for custom programming as well as open calendar registrations generate participation from districts in every county of New Jersey.

Instructors and trainers are drawn from a wide list of resources that include college faculty and staff, educational practitioners and consultants, mental health professionals, and representatives of various municipal, county and state agencies.

Benefits of Membership

Access to the services and programming offered through the SRI&ETTC is available to any individual, school district, or organization. But membership in the consortium does offer several benefits.

Member school districts receive an annual allocation of ETTC Hours that can be used to register for almost all workshops and to schedule in-service training without the need for additional purchase orders during the school year. And member districts receive a modest discount in the cost of services. For an overview of membership benefits and fees, please visit: www.ettc.net/aboutus/membership.cfm.

If interested in joining our consortium and/or purchasing training, please mail or email a written request to the SRI & ETTC at ettcgen@stockton.edu.

The ETTC is an approved professional development provider (ID#229) by the New Jersey Department of Education. We offer a diverse monthly workshop calendar with a little something for everyone!

Community and Technology

Many workshops are tailored to the needs of our non-profit members such as office technology skills, web page design, and data management. The general public is always welcome to register for our training activities.

Other Services

Building upon the success of the 2001-02 NJ Technology Fellows program, the SRI&ETTC has continued to provide coach mentoring services to school personnel including content and grade level clusters, individual teachers and administrative staff. Coach-mentoring provides one-on-one or small group training to teachers and staff members in local school districts.

Coach mentoring can occur on-site at the school district or off-site at the SRI&ETTC. Schools have requested mentoring services for beginner-level technology users as well as for more advanced topics for technology coordinators and building-level technology facilitators. Coach-mentors support math and language arts literacy initiatives in many partner districts and provide guidance and support as teachers engage in new instructional practices.

Professional Services

SRI & ETTC staff have extensive experience working with school districts in the preparation of grant applications, program evaluation services, strategic planning, and curriculum support. In addition to being awarded grants from federal, state, and private funds, the SRI & ETTC has partnered with several school districts on their grant programs. ETTC Hours can be used to purchase these services.

Distance Learning:

SRI & ETTC offers a variety of professional development and classroom workshops via web-conferencing, and various digital services. For information visit the website at www.ettc.net.
